FOR THE EQUAL RIGHTS OF EUROPEAN CITIZENS

Because we must be able to bring radical changes to today's Europe, in order to stop the political forces who want to destroy Europe

Because building a united, democratic and supportive Europe is above all a battle for rights

Because we strongly believe that the fundamental basis of a political union is the equal rights of its citizens
EuropaNow! con European Democracy Lab, TDEM, European Alternatives, The European Movement e Ogólnopolski Strajk Kobiet call on all the political forces and candidates running in the next European elections to take up the challenge of promoting the following political, economic and social rights:

1) the right of European citizens to democratically choose their European government, which means being able to review the Treaties and request the convocation of a constituent assembly that can propose, at the end of the revision process, the establishment of a European federal Republic;

2) the right of European citizens to free association, by means of a "European statute of association";

3) the right of European citizens to receive a European unemployment benefit when out of work, with a view to setting up a common social system. The lack of social ambition in currently existing political projects is a cause for the sense of abandonment felt by European citizens;

4) the right of future generations to live in a clean and well maintained environment, meaning the strict application and reinforcement of the Paris accord on climate change and the investment policies for the research and development of renewable energies. Europe needs to create an original model to guarantee equitable and sustainable social development for its citizens;

5) the right of all young Europeans to access the ErasmusPlus program and other European education and inclusion programs in general, and to take decisive action on youth unemployment;

6) the right to pay the same taxes throughout Europe, which means tax harmonisation and resolute action to fight tax avoidance and evasion by both European and non-European businesses, because this is the prerequisite for being able to defend and expand our social protection systems.

7) the right to a Europe which defends and strengthens European public policies: which involves at least doubling the EU budget by 2024 (the budget is currently less than 1 per cent of the combined GDP of all member states). This measure should allow investments which concretely affirm European solidarity, bring many regions out of isolation, and develop new European industrial centres, particularly in the digital and artificial intelligence sectors. To finance this goal, four major European taxes must be introduced, applying to the profits of large businesses, to the highest incomes (more than 200,000 euro per annum), to the largest asset holders (more than one million euro), and to emissions of carbon dioxide (with a minimum of 30 euro per tonne). While awaiting a full political union to be established in Europe, a new European assembly partially formed by national MPs could decide on those common taxes, and on the use of the resulting resources;

8) guarantee equal civil, economic and social rights, regardless of gender and sexual orientation; defend the rights of women, including their bodily autonomy;

9) the right to a European Union which conducts a credible, pragmatic, welcoming and humane migration and asylum policy. In particular, the urgent revision of the Dublin Regulation and creation of a European agency for migration to provide finances to local authorities ready to accommodate migrants and asylum seekers;

10) the right to a free and independent judiciary, starting with the implementation of a European Public Prosecutor, whose powers should not be limited to financial crime;

11) the right to a free and independent press, with the adoption of provisions to guarantee fair remuneration for work by journalists and authors with respect to content reproduced on digital platforms, and effective protection of the pluralism and independence of the media;

12) the right to culture, involving the establishment of "Maastricht parameters for culture" to allow greater access to the places where knowledge and culture are shared (theatres, cinemas, concert halls, libraries, etc.).
